A Rights Based Food System

Human and environmental rights, including resource rights, are potentially the conceptual “glue” to connect food system alternatives that otherwise often strive for different goals. Rather than fighting for independent wins, the concept of RBFS can help advocates and funders to find common ground among themselves and a coherent unified goal.

Are you interested in learning more about the issues presented? Want to support advocacy campaigns aimed at supporting rights-based solutions to our broken food system? See the following websites. Note - not listed in order of importance or relevance. All of these sites indicate links to other resource and other helpful sites.
